HOW TO REACH "ARNHEMIA"

The Flowers That Bloom In the Spring

SHAPELY, nodding heads of Tulips, swaying in the light morning breezes, the trembling fragrance of the dancing Daffodils, whether in the overpowering brilliance of the midday sun, or the cool restfulness of dusk, are an ever inspiring sight, the symbol of Spring and hope eternal. No Spring garden is complete, without the cheerful, harmonizing colors of these flowerbulbs, identified for centuries with the land of the windmills and the wooden shoes.

Oddly enough these flowerbulbs did not originate in The Netherlands, but principally in the Southern and Eastern part of Europe, Persia and Asia Minor and were collected by botanists and travelers. Eventually, together with the herbs from far lands, the druggists first distributed them at prices beyond the reach of all but the wealthiest plant fanciers.

In the early 17th. century, as 'Dumas' novel "La Tulipe Noire" indicates, the wild speculation of tulip fanciers reached such proportions that fabulous sums were paid for one bulb.

Gradually it became apparent that the soil and climate of The Netherlands were particularly suited to the culture of flowerbulbs. And so the growing of flowerbulbs became a major industry in The Netherlands and they have found their way into the gardens of the world.

Here at "Arnhemia" you can see the finest importations from The Netherlands, flowering in the proper setting which can be duplicated in your own garden.

Many novelties are tried out from year to year and visitors share in no small way in selecting valuable additions to our up-to-date list.

Write us for flowering dates and pay us a visit, the Topiary Peacock will welcome you at the Garden Gate.

We shall be very glad to assist you in the planning of your garden, no matter how small and supply all necessary material. Our landscape architect will draw a plan to suit your taste.

Narcissi Classification

Narcissi, more popularly named Daffodils, represent such a varied number of forms and types, that it is more than interesting to make a study of these and learn to distinguish the proper type, when you see the flower.

A new classification of Narcissi is being inaugurated this year, as a result of the efforts of the Royal Horticultural Society of England, in cooperation with the United States of America, The Netherlands, Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

For some years a growing feeling existed that the old system of classification needed drastic revision, in order to provide for the evolution of the flower due to hybridization.

The new classification will make the distinction between the various types a good deal more logical and easier.

How and Where to Plant

When you think that you just have no suitable spot for flowers, when you think that the soil is bad, that nothing will grow, because of too much shade, too many trees or stones, it is high time that you acquaint yourself with the possibilities every type of garden, woodland, orchard or meadow affords to Narcissi.

Although in certain cases a little expert advice might be necessary, any garden soil will be suitable and may be improved by applications of ordinary bone meal or well rotted cow manure and compost. Proper drainage is a must.

No special working of the soil is necessary, but the holes should be dug in such a manner, that the top of the bulb is three to four inches below the surface, that the soil around the bulb is loose and the bulb should be set firmly in the soil, so that the new roots are in immediate contact with it. The bulbs should never touch manure or fertilizer. Plant six to eight inches apart.

Narcissi have a short dormant period and should be planted early, not later than the end of October; this does not mean that later plantings, depending upon the weather, are apt to be a failure, but it is just not giving them the best chance.

Most plantings of Narcissi improve from year to year, require little or no care and do as well in dense shade as in full sun. In the woods they can be left to themselves, in the orchard or meadow the grass should not be cut, until the foliage of the Narcissi has browned completely. For this reason plantings of Narcissi in lawns are not advisable.

A particularly beneficial fertilizer for Narcissi consists of 2 lbs. of muriate of potash and 2 lbs. of acid phosphate per 100 square feet or 300 bulbs and for stimulation of growth and intensifying of color 1 lb. of nitrate of soda applied in early Spring will do wonders.

The cultural directions given above are for the Eastern States only; write us for advice for your locality.

Besides using Narcissi for naturalizing in the woods, along the brook or around the lake, they definitely have a place in the herbaceous border, where planted in clumps of 6 to 12 bulbs, in the foreground, preferably staggered, they give the badly needed color in Spring, combined with Botanical Tulips, particularly Fosteriana, Muscari Heavenly Blue, Mertensia Virginica and Myosotis.

Groups of Narcissi in front of evergreens, amongst Pachysandra or Myrtle are quite effective. In shady spots, hardy Ferns in many varieties, make an ideal combination.

Tulips

WHERE TO PLANT

Although there is hardly a spot in the garden where some type of Tulips could not be planted, we believe, in order to prevent unnecessary failures, or if only just to compare notes, we do well to give a general outline.

It should be understood thoroughly that Tulips will not be happy in damp, low spots and will have a hard time in exposed, wind swept positions. Both conditions can be remedied, one by proper drainage, the other by screening in early Spring.

If nothing else, most gardens, no matter how small, usually have a herbaceous border or foundation planting.

The herbaceous border lends itself, better than any other place, for a collection of Tulips, planted in groups of one dozen bulbs toward the front, in combination with Daffodils. In order to prolong the period of flowering, early and late varieties of Tulips should be used.

Amongst the evergreens in a foundation planting, Tulips may be tucked away in nooks in small quantities, depending upon the available space, or the space on either side of the front entrance may be planted solidly with Tulips, in which case not too many varieties should be used and the colors should be bright and harmonizing. Pachysandra or myrtle make a good ground cover in this case, otherwise Pansies should be used in combination with the Tulips, to be followed by annuals.

The formal garden requires more planning and material, but in simple design can be very beautiful, even in diminutive form.

It is essential that each bed should be planted with one variety only, that the colors of the various varieties harmonize and that the height is the same, except for the center bed.

Tulips do no mind partial shade, on the contrary this protection tends to draw the stems to greater length and the blooms last longer.

A fine example of this type of planting is a garden path, flanked by French Hybrid Lilacs, setting off a border of Peonies, interplanted with Tulips. In order to attain color harmony, the Tulips should be in pink, lilac and mauve shades, similar to the Lilacs, which flower at the same time. The Peonies in various varieties bloom for several weeks, beginning around the end of May.

We should not forget to plant a few Tulips in the cutting or vegetable garden, not alone for flowers for the house, but also to try out a few new varieties.

HOW TO PLANT

No matter where Tulips are planted, the soil must be dug deeply, at least a foot deep. Every three years a layer of two inches of well rotted cowmanure should be dug in, before planting, deep enough to keep the manure from the Tulips; the following two years a little lime and/or bone-meal, to be applied after planting and raked in.

The depth of planting depends upon the depth of the soil, but from four to six inches from the top of the bulb to the surface works out best. This of course does not apply to the Botanical Tulips, which should only be planted about two inches deep. Tulips planted at greater depth may flower just as well, but we see no point in this practice.

Although there is no question about the fact, that by planting closely, a more brilliant and spectacular effect is attained, we like to suggest planting Tulips from 6 to 8 inches apart, perhaps a little closer in the case of the Single Early Tulips. Never put less than 6 bulbs in one clump.

The only right way to plant Tulips is with a trowel, unless you want to use your hands; see to it that they are all planted at the same depth, if you want them to bloom at an even height and above all, set the bulbs firmly in the soil.

In formal gardens planting may be done by removing the topsoil to the proper depth and placing the tulips at the right distance, replacing the soil. Under these circumstances it is also convenient to renew the topsoil every three years, forking the sub-soil and working in a layer of well rotted cowmanure.

Wherever the Tulips are planted, proper cultivation of the soil up to flowering time is absolutely necessary and feeding with a good bulbfood will intensify the color of the flowers and make for longer stems.

WHEN TO PLANT

When your Tulips arrive, keep them in a dry, dark and cool place, to prevent root action, which would be injurious to the flowering results. Top growth does not matter. Open all bags and do not stand them on a damp floor.

In the East late planting is advisable, from the last week in October to the end of November, depending upon the weather. Do not plant right after a rain.

Generally speaking, Tulips may be planted successfully as long as the ground is open.

The cultural directions given above are for the Eastern States only; write us for advice for your locality.

PROTECTION

Experience has taught us that in general bulbs need no protection against winter weather and that often more harm is done by covering.

Evergreen boughs are by far the best winter cover, in that they allow the air to get to the plants. When salt hay is used, this should be removed in early Spring, to prevent the young growth from becoming soft or being damaged. This applies to perennials also.

STORING

If you have the proper facilities to store your Tulips, after they are through flowering and properly ripened, if it is practical to disturb your border in July, there is an advantage in digging your Tulips every year, even though you will only be able to save a percentage of the bulbs planted and they are likely to be smaller.

Otherwise we feel that you are better off to leave your Tulips in the ground, dig them up the third year, plant the few worthwhile Tulips in your cutting garden and buy new stock for the garden. It is understood that only the first year can you expect top size flowers.

Needless to say that only buying new Tulips every year, assures maximum results and for formal beds, where the bulbs have to be dug at the end of the flowering season, to make room for the annuals, it is necessary to do so.

Digging up your Tulips directly after the flowers have passed, if done very carefully, using a fork, so that the root system is damaged as little as possible and then heel them in at once, plant and all, in the cutting garden, allowing the bulbs to ripen, can be done without too much injury to the bulbs. Of course, there again you cannot expect anywhere near as many Tulips that can be used for another year and they will also be considerably smaller.

Darwin Tulips

Almost a century ago this sturdiest and most colorful race of all Tulips was introduced, without any data on its origin.

Twenty-five years of careful selecting of self colors, gradually perfected this strain; the originator named them in honor of Charles Darwin, father of the theory of evolution.

The Darwin Tulips distinguish themselves through the typical cup shape of their flower and the predominant color range of from the softest pink to the deepest red and violet.

Cottage Tulips

These were originally found in England on the farms and near the cottages in rural areas, uncultivated, growing wild for years, until all at once they drew the attention of the fanciers.

Their characteristics are very similar to those of the species, in that most varieties have pointed petals, sometimes recurved and many varieties have smaller flowers on shorter stems. Blooming at the same time as the Darwins and Breeders, they can be used very effectively, grouped in front of these taller types.

Yellow was originally one of the predominant colors, but at the present time, due to cross hybridizing with Darwins and Breeders, they come in many pleasing shades and look more or less like them in form and height.

Had these enchanting woodland plants no other beauty than that of the richly mottled leaves, they would more than deserve a spot in your garden.

So much more so do they enchant the flower lover with their lily-like flowers in delicate tints of white, pink, cream, lavender, bright kellow and even deepest rose.

The bulbs should be planted in a moist, loamy soil, set upright, with 2 to 3 inches of soil covering the tips; two inches apart will give room enough. The bulbs are delivered in October and they bloom throughout the month of April.

(VIRGINIA BLUE BELLS)

As an early Spring flower, requiring hardly any care, Mertensia is most useful, regardless of the type of planting. The plant grows from one to two feet high bears a panicle of flowers about one inch long in short pendent clusters of a porcelain-blue and soft pink combination.

In the border, the rockgarden, or for naturalizing in the woods it makes a lovely companion for the Daffodils, being in bloom at the same time, continuing into the month of May.

The roots should be planted immediately upon delivery, about two to three inches deep and without further care they will establish themselves and increase.

Largest roots $2.65 for 10, $24.00 per 100.

Hardy Lilies

In order to give most types of Lilies the proper chance to establish themselves, so that they feel at home, and flower for us many years in succession, it is advisable to give them the protection of the shrubbery border or woodland.

Incorporate peat moss to lighten heavy soils and fertilize with bone meal only. Never use manure and be very careful with chemical fertilizers.

Plant at the prescribed depth and make certain of good drainage; envelop the bulbs in sharp sand.

The right time to plant Lilies, like any other bulb, is, after they are dormant in the Fall. They are delivered to you at that time, beginning with Lilium Candidum in August and ending with Lilium Speciosum in November. Lilies cannot be dug until they are dormant and even if delivered as late as December, they will give a good account of themselves.

There are several varieties of Lilies which may be kept in cold storage over winter, for Spring planting, if this proves more convenient.

Herbaceous Peonies

The Peony is a native of China and was a source of inspiration for painters and poets during the Golden Era. Even today the conventionalized Peony is much seen in Chinese Art.

For hardiness and vigor, for sheer loveliness, Peonies are amongst our most useful perennials. Once established, the plants increase in size and quality for many years and the rich coloring of the flowers, as well as the attractive foliage, even after the flowers are gone, enhance the beauty of your garden. They bloom from Memorial Day on.

As a cutflower it serves many purposes and lasts a long time.

Peonies can be grown in most any location, even in light shade and a good garden soil of loamy texture, sufficiently drained, will do.

Bone meal or any available garden fertilizer may be used and woodashes, about a handful to a plant, will prove beneficial.

The roots should be planted so that the buds are about two inches below the surface; too deep planting often prevents the plant from blooming.

The best time to plant is in the Fall, September and October, but weather permitting, later planting does no harm. Spring planting, if necessary, should be done as soon as the frost is out of the ground, provided the soil is not too wet.

Our selection represents outstanding varieties only, early, mid-season and late flowering; our roots have from 5 to 8 eyes or buds and flower the first year.

Tree Peonies

(PEONIA ARBOREA)

This species, a shrub in character, is one of the first to bloom in the early Spring, followed by the Herbaceous Peonies.

Native to the mountains of China and from there imported into Japan, the Tree Peony was imported into this country at about the turn of the century.

The flowers are larger than those of the Herbaceous Peonies and have a crepe-paper-like texture, ruffled and crimped on the edges of the petals.

A well established, mature bush is a truly gorgeous sight when in full bloom, growing three to four feet in height and spread and bearing 25 to 100 blooms.

Plant in early Fall, avoid exposure to North or West winds and protect the plants the first winter.

Our shrubs are 4 to 5 years old and have already bloomed in the nursery.

Hardy Evergreen Kurume Azaleas

Surpassing all others in abundance of color, no flowering shrub can be used almost anywhere as the evergreen Azalea.

Easily grown and reasonably hardy, their combination of pleasing colors never fails to create a breath taking picture. Massed with flowers to the extent of hiding the foliage from sight, perfect in form, they are shapely shrubs par excellence.

They increase rapidly in growth and depending upon the variety, they reach a height of up to 4 feet in less than 5 years.

WHERE TO PLANT

Although essentially sun loving, the ideal location for Kurume Azaleas in the North East is partial shade, fairly protected; they should have sufficient moisture at all times. Rhododendrons, Kalmias and Andromedas make a perfect background for a planting of Kurume Azaleas; planted in groups along a woodland path or a brook they provide a pleasant surprise and in the tulip border they tie in ideally and carry the blooming season into June.

A fair garden soil, whether stiff or sandy, can easily be made suitable for these Azaleas, as long as there is no lime present, by incorporating peatmoss, leafmold or muck and adding to this from year to year. Superphosphate, sulphate of potash and ammonium sulphate may be applied after the Azaleas are through flowering.

HOW TO PLANT

Azaleas are easily transplanted any time of the year, preferably in September or in Spring. Dig holes large enough, so that a goodly amount of leafmold can be put around the ball, giving the fine roots a chance to start to work at once. Pack the soil around the roots and apply water liberally. Use a mulch of leaves or pine needles and do not cultivate, since the roots of Azaleas come close to the surface. Water thoroughly before winter sets in and cover with evergreen boughs.
